

DRAKE

Magnificent and terrible, drakes represent the iconic draconic form: one head, two wings, four legs and one tail, covered in dazzling scales. Fangs line their jaws, pairs of horns jut backwards on their heads, and their necks, backs and tails are lined with sharp, scaly ridges. Considered the quintessential dragons, they long ago left the Maelstrom for the Core, Worldtree and Cloudriver, where each drake bloodline has adapted to preferred environments, reflected in its deadly slaybreath, per drake breed. Drakes live alone or in small families (2–9 individuals), and while all drake breeds can mate with each other, each offspring reflects only one breed, not two.

- Silver-white ice drakes live in any cold terrain, even tall equatorial peaks in otherwise hot tropical climes, and breathe swaths of freezing snow (frost).
- Golden-red fire drakes dwell in any warm terrain, like deserts, barren hills, or rocky mountains, or volcanic regions in otherwise frigid polar climes, and breathe cones of intense flames (flare).
- Green-aqua plague drakes live in lush coastal waters and marshes, as well as wetlands and woodlands far from the seas, and breath fogs of deadly disease (rot).
- Orange-ochre sludge drakes dwell in stagnant swamps and mires, as well as festering marshes, and breathe torrents of corrosive acid (rasp).
- Yellow-amber wind drakes dwell in wide-open plains, grasslands, steppes and deserts, and breathe bolts of crackling lightning (shock).
- Grey-ashen storm drakes live in rolling hills, foothills and mountains, as well as rift valleys, and breathe claps of resounding thunder (shake).
- Pearl-blue sky drakes live in the steepest mountains, especially in rocky crags above the treeline, and breathe flashes of blinding light (gleam).
- Black-purple night drakes dwell in fathomless oceans, or deep in subterranean lakes, or in cave networks, and breathe waves of deep darkness (gloom).
