

IMP

Among fiends, imps are the most unpredictably adaptable. Found throughout the fiend-dominated Heavens, as well as throughout the Multiverse on unsavory errands from more powerful fiends, imps are the weakest of their kind. Imps are frequently bullied by their mightier kin, used as servants or trained in skills like hewry, smithing, tanning, weaving and carpentry, crafting the bulk of the armors, shields and weapons that the more powerful fiends wield. They are also tasked with enchanting objects with magic, especially potions. In reality, the fiendish armies would be better served by relying on fiends with sharper factual minds rather than intuitive minds for these tasks, but nevertheless the role of the artisans fell to the imps. Anytime a corrupt mortal summons a fiend for service, an imp will likely appear, as other fiends are better able to resist the call. For themselves, imps are surprisingly strong willed and have a deep sense of their own value, even if they disregard the value of other lives. They may appear submissive, but if they ever see the opportunity to undermine their masters, they will not hesitate... yet will not take unnecessary risks, for time is on their side.

- Manipulator imps are dastardly fiends who sow mistrust and betrayal, tormenting mortals and ruining their relationships, hiding in darkness and whispering deceit, or using technically accurate information for evil purposes. Small and smart, they have lizard-like forms blended with snakes, with one horned head and fanged mouths, two lanky arms with deft hands and curled claws, two nimble legs and one spine-lined tail, as well as two reptilian wings. Their scales range from chalky white to dark brown to deep green. Like spitting cobras, they can flare skin along the sides of their heads and spit venom to disable victims.
- Tormentor imps are mean fiends who enjoy inflicting pain, rooted in their deep personal insecurity that causes them to want to take power over others in order to make up for what they lack. With their acute instincts and ability to sense what others are feeling, they excel at identifying weaknesses and taking advantage. Like their smaller manipulator kin, they have reptilian characteristics, though they also have insectoid features. With one crocodilian head adorned with antennae and multiple eye-clusters, they have four arms and two legs lined with mantid-like spines, four locust-like wings, as well as scorpion-like tails ending in stingers.
